THE NATION'S SORROW HOUR.

THE PRESIDENT DEAD.

The Official Announcement.

THE ASSASSINS IDENTIFIED.

MR. W. H. SEWARD REVIVING.

By the United States Line.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, April 15, 7 a m.

To Major General Dix:

The President still breathes, but his quiet hours are few, and he does not once leave his unconscious state.

He evidently did not see the person who shot him, but was looking on the stage, as he was approached from behind.

Mr. Seward has rallied, and it is hoped he may live.

The wounds of Major Seward are not serious.

Investigation strongly indicates that J. Wilkes Booth is the assassin of the President.

Whether it was the same or a different person that attempted to murder Mr. Seward remains to be known.

Chief Justice Chase is engaged in taking evidence.

Every exertion has been made to prevent the escape of the murderer.

His horse has been found on the east side of Washington.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

By the American Line.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C.
April 15, 1865, 9 15 a. m.

To Major Gen. Dix:

The President continues insensible, and a sinking one.

Secretary Seward remains without change.

Frederick Seward's skull is fractured in two places, besides a severe cut upon the head.

The attendants are still alive, but hopeless

Major Seward's wounds are not dangerous.

It is now ascertained with reasonable certainty that two assassins were engaged in the horrible action. Booth, beyond a doubt, fired the shot at the President; the other a companion of his whose name is as known, but whose description is not sufficiently clear to be made public.

It appears from a letter found in Booth's trunk that the murder was planned before the fourth of March, but fell through then because the accomplice backed out until "Richmond could be heard from."

Booth and his associates were at the theatre under an old, which last evening, and left their work there known about ten o'clock, evidently by more than hour.

It would seem that for several days they had been making the chance, but for some reason, the reason it was not carried out effect until last night.

One of them has evidently made his way to Baltimore.

The other has not yet been traced.

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 15, 1865.

Maj. Gen. Dix:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN died this morning at twenty-two minutes past seven (7) o'clock

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Death of the President.

A service will be held in Grace Church, this afternoon, at 4 o'clock, in expression of the great sorrow which has come upon us and to supplicate the divine mercy in behalf of our bereaved and afflicted nation.

THE CAPITULATION.—Gen. Orr purchased fifty dollars the suits on which Lee signed the articles of capitulation. The owner, Mr. McLean, refused to sell the chairs in which the two Generals sat during their conference. But two officers in some way got possession of them and secured them away.

SECRETARY SEWARD JUST ALIVE.

His Son Frederick W. Dead.

BOOTH, THE ASSASSIN, ARRESTED.

Further Particulars of the Tragedy

By the United States Line.

WASHINGTON, April 15, 9 a. m.—Secretary Seward is just alive.

His son, F. W. Seward, is dead.

Later.

Booth, the murderer of President Lincoln, is now in custody. He has been caught at Port Hastings, near Washington.

By the American Line.

WASHINGTON, April 15th, 8.40 a. m.—Frederick Seward is dead. He died at half past seven o'clock.

Secretary Seward passes an unconscious night. He is still alive, but his condition is hopeless. Several distinct fractures in the parts of parietal arresting, the contents of the brain, and the amount of the Secretary of State and his son

Major Augustus Seward, it is thought, will recover. He was severely injured in the head, but not in the condition of Secretary Seward.

The assassin of President Lincoln is J. Wilkes Booth, a well-known actor, as the murderer of the President.

Further Account of the Assassination.

"Every" telegraph in the Boston Journal has additional particulars of the bloody deed of crime, and of the National Capital.

A gentleman present informs me that the President was shot in the back of the head, causing almost instant death to the President of the play, which was in its third act. Booth, the assassin, is an actor by profession, and before he could reach the stage, was intercepted and arrested. Mrs. Lincoln, President's friend, and the fatal ball, which entered the back of the head, and was found in the President's lap, after the assassin had escaped. Mrs. Lincoln, Miss Harris, Gen. Grant, and Major Rathbone were in the box. Gen. Grant was disappointed behind the scenes, escaping with a slight wound. The latter was slightly injured.

Booth, upon at the bounding house opposite the theatre, in which he was arrested. Within was secured, described as impressive and sad.

The President's body has been laid in the back room, surrounded by his family, Cabinet and a few friends. Secretary Seward's house is also occupied, since the disabling assault of Mr. Seward himself, and the attempted assassination of his son Frederick.

Mrs. Lincoln and her sons are in the deepest grief. Robert Lincoln arrived from Burlington, Vermont, after the assassination, and arrived at the President's bed, and his

And there is still to have issued a proclamation announcing the capture of Jefferson Davis and the flight of the remainder of the rebel leaders. But the report would seem to be premature.

There is a report that Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts has telegraphed to Washington that he will furnish nothing dollars given to conscription.

There were 44 deaths in Philadelphia last week, and in New York, yesterday.

The remains of General Sumner have been received at the fourth page of this morning's issue.

THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND SECRETARY SEWARD.

The hour of our triumph is the hour of our speakable sorrow. President Lincoln and Secretary Seward were late night at Washington!

That noble man, most beloved of all men by the nation, the great, good, Abraham Lincoln, was murdered in cold blood!

Our pen almost refuses to write the words! But alas! alas! they must be written. The fiendish relief have, which has pursued him with diabolical fury these four and more, has at last finished his malice and his precious life. He died the overwhelming power of this fresh grief we are almost dumb. Thank God even in this our hour of unspeakable woe that the President lived to see the great triumph, to which he labored and suffered, which struck down by the assassin's bullet, he gave to the skies followed by [illegible] such hate as no men save Washington ever inspired, such devotion, such passion, and honored by the love and the good of all hearts in an other moment of this age. The greatest martyr to this holy cause of freedom is the last!

Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, was also fatally stricken by the dagger of the assassin and while probably the last hour of this great statesman to the nation is only second to that of the President himself.

Mr. Frederick W. Seward, the Assistant Secretary of State, is also dangerously hurt, and his recovery is doubtful.

It is not improbable that if Gen. Grant had accompanied the President, as was suggested, he too would have been slain.

The plot for these fearful murders was so [illegible] formed. Who can help believing that the leaders of the rebel government, the men who conceived the plot prepared for the administration of Mr. Lincoln, when he was on his way to Washington, also instigated these crimes for which there is no adequate term in human language? In this the honest and unquestioning of minds, of which men are willing as in these days?

The resignation of Brig Gen. Thomas Ewing, Jr., recently in command of the St. Louis district, has been accepted by the President.

The Evening Bulletin Resolves

At last the glad hour has come, when our long cherished is deemed no prying pass, the price is no strength of our heart, in its victims. How many hours has its cold sun heard screaming, moaning, softly through our country during the last four years, commencing our treasure and here, the flower of our youth, in suffering, carnage and death! Its cold light is still in its heard on more. There is also to be immediate reimachment in the military and civil administration. The [illegible] of the traitors will at once be largely reduced. The traitors will be [illegible] and the whole will speedily [illegible] in values as bones and abroad. They have [illegible] the day of their triumph during the past few weeks. When the news of our gross victories and of our capture of the capitals of Richmond and Paris, the Tory Treasite will, not much yet grieve rapidly. Gold will therefore rise in value, and [illegible] will fall in price.

The tremendous expenses, which the States are now [illegible] will be greatly reduced in many ways, as we may suggest. The aggregate of these will be very large. Then just think of the honest [illegible] which the [illegible] yesterday among the honest brokers, honest jumpers, et cetera.

The national expenditure must for some time be very large. But it will be on a great scale and good gross strength lies in the knowledge of the fact. The [illegible] of the country is now in a state of steadily growing lighter. We did not know the [illegible] of the rebellion, and were not aware that other power was united by war. We venture to say that we have not now a single enemy in the [illegible] power, which our nation will meet [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] war. The electricity and toughness of the American people will be [illegible] and [illegible] and unexpected calamity deemed our belief in, our ability and our course to succeed, and upward, but not [illegible] with a rapidity, which will astound even [illegible].

It is reported that not a few of the old officers of the army, who resigned to join the rebels, will be dismissed when the rebellion breaks out, are now [illegible] to be reinstated in the ranks of which they have the impudence to ask for offices. The [illegible] of the country is not to be so got off. No more which they left. Plenty of them will [illegible] to be reinstated in the ranks of which they have from the present and all strength, the [illegible] of the land, there was an immense number of which [illegible] to be called [illegible] among the [illegible] and their sympathizers at the north. More [illegible] of the rebellion will be [illegible] and the sudden change of heart on Sunday night. They were [illegible] to [illegible] but of memory.—They talked so [illegible] they had never had anything to the rebellion, or any desire for its success. [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] the fire, as though the rebel pigment could be washed off their faces as the government. Natures of their rough [illegible] and found it was fast. Bad night. But these repentance is better than none.

We shall not [illegible] to [illegible] rebel pretensions in the South, who will starve by the collision of a [illegible] currency, and who will [illegible] and [illegible] the fire, as though the rebel pigment could be washed off their faces as the government. Natures of their rough [illegible] and found it was fast. Bad night. But these repentance is better than none.

We shall not [illegible] to [illegible] rebel pretensions in the South, who will starve by the collision of a [illegible] currency, and who will [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible]. There is a large and artful class of southern [illegible] who will endeavor to [illegible] public opinion. They will not believe to stop their [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] for a [illegible] [illegible], if an opportunity is offered. But we don't so much that they will stand alone from the [illegible] of the country. They will not give up [illegible] but [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Surrender at Ava, Ler.

"Outlaws" of the Boston Journal thus describe the surrender of Lee.

RESCUE OF GENERALS GRANT AND LEE.

In the little village of Appomattox Court House there is a large square brick house with a portico in front, the residence of Wilmer McLean. Here are building in the garden, a store and dwelling are directly in front and the trees which shade the house are apple trees. On the morning of Sunday, April 9, Lee had his headquarters in the house of Mr. McLean. On the previous Saturday afternoon about 4 o'clock Gen. Sheridan, Gen. Marshall, his chief of staff, entered the court house. At the same time Gen. Custer, who had ridden only by Col. Forbes, of his staff, stood at the door. Gen. Sheridan was in his shirt sleeves, in great amusement at something, although not laughing.

The morning was in Mr. McLean's parlor at square room, about 20 feet, furnished with cane chairs, rather—Gen. Lee was a step by the table, dressed in full uniform. Gen. Sheridan had been left in front, and Gen. Grant was outside opposite. Mr. McLean's wife, all of the family present, sat in the room with Gen. Lee. Gen. Grant had left his sword behind, and appeared in the same suit he had worn in the field during the campaign. He had on a soft hat, a dark coat with shoulder straps, and slouched boots, the latter bearing the three silver stars of a Lieutenant General. Grant.

The meeting was cordial. After salutations the conversation turned upon old times, about their former service connected as they are in other fights when both were young officers in the old army. Gen. Lee alluded to subsequent events in the Mexican parcel between them.

"Gen. I have requested this interview to know upon what terms you propose," and

After a long chat Gen. Grant offered to allow the officers to retain their side arms and personal effects and the troopers who owned their horses to retain them, as the animals were

After further conversation General Lee expressed a wish that Gen. Grant should put in writing the terms on which a cessation of hostilities, the disposition of parole, &c., were then being formulated. Gen. Grant replied by Confederate commissioners.

"I will refer such questions to be stated to writing now I am not prepared to do so, but the conversation were settled, the headquarters proposed to Gen. Lee pen to each writing of heads that that purpose.

Gen. Lee said that he had not the slightest idea of the number of men remaining in his army, but whatever had been made since the fight began and the number of his army suffered considerable diminution from starvation, desertions, &c. Grant said nothing. The conversation was somewhat desultory, and the surrender was then discussed, but all the rolls are made out the number cannot be given at present.

Grant learning that Lee's troops were short of provisions, at once ordered that 25,000 rations be sent to Lee's army for Lee's consideration.

Gen. Grant had anticipated the surrender of Lee, and brought the terms of it with him. Upon being asked the result. The question of disposing of the troops was then discussed, and Grant's terms were agreed upon, and he wrote out the article correct. He would immediately send word to each Pierce and England to that effect, requesting the rebels as belligerents. He did not wish to embarrass them, as he could not control the armed proceedings of arms. The rebels were disposed to be very fair in their dealings with us, and his object was to restore them to the Union and not to degrade them.

Gen. Lee remarked that the cessation of hostilities would have the effect of stopping General Gordon, Sheridan, Williams, Ruckles and Ruckard, who were pressing on Gen. Lee. Also mentioned Gen. Grant's staff, Col. John S. Col. Porter, Col. Parker, Col. Bowers, Col. Ingot, Col. Comstock, Col. Schaffner, Capt. Ralston, Capt. Lemuel and Capt. Pierce, who were present during the whole of the detailed investigation's proceedings. His bearing is remarkably good. No illusory except in the necessary omission of harmless was made, and what had transpired, but the conversation was of a special nature and spoken in most complimentary with the war.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT TO THE ARMIES.

The satisfactory of the negotiations was announced to the army by bulletin. As the news flew along, the lines were thronged and cheer after cheer arising from divisions, brigades, regiments—cheer after cheer, and the men were wild with delight. Their fighting was over, and they could now go home. Many of them wanted the name of their regiments, which were soon made known to them by the officers and men, especially by those who owned horses. They cheered loudly and with fresh heartily. The news was such as they had not expected to hear for months to come, and they were nearly overcome by it. Bonfires were made and soon—no vessels, rockets and musketry—suggestive of days of work of death, and the remainder hostility of the terms surprised them. They have not any distinct conception of the terms of our own army, who remember that General Grant is universally known as a man of mercy. The United States soldier, but who could so magnanimous any hostility, without comparison of conquerors? He was the victor and knew it.

There are thirteen bayonets in the Army of the Potomac, and which will be collected in a body and as a great commander, the center of the line, and marched to the front of Lee's army. Small on their proximity.

SECOND MEETING OF LEE AND GRANT.

On Monday morning at 10 o'clock Lee and Grant met in the house the terms were accompanied by their staffs, it was agreed that the officers and men should sign a duplicate of the terms, and that they should not be disturbed by the United States authority so long as they observed their parole and obeyed the laws in force where they resided.

The staffs of both Generals were consulted, and an hour was spent in writing upon official paper. Longstreet, Hill, Gordon, Pickett, with their staffs, were present during the time, and were all assembled in the residence of Gen. Lee, and the officers of the Union chose to him. At parting there was a general shaking of hands and a desire expressed that they might all meet again under better circumstances.

Privateers was given to Lee and to all his officers, which was at once

THE SURRENDER OF THE ARMY.

When Lee returned to his army he rode along the lines, riding at a trot, a handful of men probably not exceeding two thousand—and were received by loud cheering and other demonstrations of joy.

The last scene the hour of parting with his officers. Lee seemed his sadness and composure, but his officers could not keep back their tears—It was to be their last meeting. He was to lead them no more on battle.

The surrender brought before them an army more than all was over—all—but—their sacrifices, sufferings, heroism, had been in vain; this their pride had been humbled, that instead of being victors, they were vanquished; that perhaps liberty and the regenerate welfare of mankind depended over one to all ages, would hold them responsible for all the blood which had been shed—it was a sad hour in the body of their spirits—among the shores of a conflicting, long and bloody campaign.

THREE O'CLOCK.

A PROCLAMATION,

BY

JAMES T. SMITH,

GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,

And the Nation Mourns.

Our venerated and beloved President, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, is no more.

The hand of the assassin has been laid upon him! He was shot last evening, and expired this morning at 7 o'clock.

An attempt to assassinate the Secretary of State of the United States was made at the same hour, and hence, the Assistant Secretary, was severely wounded in the effects of medicine and has since died. And these awful crimes committed in the Capital of the Nation! What added to these to be recorded on the page of history!

In the midst of this appalling event, I, JAMES T. SMITH, Governor of the State of Rhode Island, do rise up for performance, in obedience to the charge of this State to assemble their congregations for special hour, at their several places of worship, on Sunday, the 16th instant,

There to offer up their prayers to Almighty God for recovery and bereaved country, in behalf. His aid and blessing to those our servants called to serve in their confidence and sincerity; to ask His help instead of our own to explore its wonders for our rulers; and in respect wisdom to him who is now to assume the high responsibility which have so suddenly fallen upon him.

Let the people mourn with one accord! Let the deepest sympathy be extended to the bereaved families upon which these terrible afflictions have fallen!

In testimony whereof I have hereto set, my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Rhode Island, at the city of Providence, this fifteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, and of the independence in the eighty-ninth.

JAMES T. SMITH

By His Excellency

JOHN R. BARTLETT, Secretary of State

ANOTHER PERSON INJECTED INTO OFFICE.—A PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, April 15, 12 o'clock—Andrew Johnson was sworn in as President of the United States, at 11 o'clock. Secretary McCulloch and Attorney General Speed and others were present. Is there a market? The flames are raised. I will perform them, reading, [illegible]

Further Particulars of the Assassination.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The arrests of the President left behind him his hat and a spur. The last mentioned spur on the President's boot, has been identified as the one belonging to the conspirator Booth. It was found on the floor of the house, and that is also identified as the one discovered at the stable where the same man hired the horse in the evening.

Two gentlemen who went to the Secretary of State's residence, called at the house of Mr. Seward, on the residence of the former, a carriage full in a cloak, who, when removed by their companions. It had been Mr. Seward's intention to accompany Mr. Lincoln to the theatre and occupy a seat with him, but a press of business prevented. It therefore seems evident that the plot was laid for the murder of the President and Secretary of State the head, heart and soul of the country.

At noon to-day the cabinet was in session when the chief clerk, Superintendent Richards and Inspector Hollahan, came in to discover the wounded Secretary. The officers had some of the police force of the city with them. The house and several rooms of the first story were searched soon on the spot, and every precaution was taken to prevent new and spies. Every room was patrolled on the request of Richards. Gen. Augur was present during the search.

Every room leading out of the sick room was strongly guarded, and every possible avenue of escape guarded. Secretary Seward was informed in depart from the Province was stopped.

Secretary Seward says, "As it is supposed the President's assassin is Maryland, the telegraph is flashed, the wires are kept hot with orders to arrest the assassin. Every train and boat upon every road, and every precaution taken to prevent the escape of the assassin.

A preliminary examination was made by Richards and Hollahan, and the wounded Secretary was called to testify and the audience is confined to the sick room. Secretary Seward was found in bed. Fred. Wm. Seward. He has received a severe wound in the head, and the left cheek and jaw are broken. His face is very much swollen, and the left eye nearly closed. Secretary Seward was found in bed. Fred.
